DEATH OF MRS. DISBAELI.

Viscountess Beaconsfield, wife of Rt. Hop. Benjamin Disraeli, died in London on the 15th inst. She was the widow of Wyndham Lewis, and was married to Disraeli in 1838. She is said to have been neither young nor handsome at that date, but she had some money and more brains. She was a woman of great energy and ambition, and much of what Disraell accomand assistance he received from her. It is related as an illustration of the indomitable bravery, as well as the splendid self-abnegation of Mrs. Disraeli, that on one occasion when her husband was to deliver an important speech, upon which he had expended much labor and from which he anticipated substantial results, she took him to the House of Commons in her carriage. Arriving at the entrance he bade her adieu, hastily closed the door of the vehicle and departed. The door, as it shut, caught her finger and crushed flesh and bone to a puip. Intense as was the agory, the will was more intense and conquered it. Repressing the exclamation which she feared might recall her husband and distract his thoughts, she quietly drove to the nearest surgeon, had the wound dressed, and when Mr. Disraeli came home at night overflowing with the triumph he at night overflowing with the triumph he for the resumption of specie payments, in-troduced in the House to-day, provides that finger as her share of what that triumph cost. Sustained and inspired by such a wife, it is no wonder that Disraeli surmounted all obstacles, rose step by step ustil Parliament not the a payment of debts contracted only heard him, but was glad to acknowledge him as a peerless leader, and finally saluted him as a Chancellor of the Exchequer and Premier of England. Great and Louisians. Special to the Louisville Courier-Journal. WASHINGTON, Dec. 15 .- The high-handed action of the President in overthrowing by his bayonet the State government chosen by the people of Louisiana, and installing anew the old game of plunder, has dissapated all the hopes which Southern men ever had formed that Grant would pursue a generous policy towards the South. The general comment is that it is the most emphatic stride towards military despotism which has yet been taken by the President. It is believed by well-informed parties that these proceedings were all instigated by Grant himself, and were not the result of bad advice. Durell's usurpation is supposed to have been planned here; and it is said that he is aspiring to a seat on the Supreme Bench when Judge Chase shall vacate. Grant's object is thought to be the elevation of one of his personal household to the United States Senate. The committee from New Orleans are reported on their way here, and it is possible that their advent and the presentation of their memorial to Congress may produce more agitation of the subject than has yet occurred. The most striking circumstance connected with this outrage is that no man has yet been found in Congress to lift up his voice against it. With many, this springs from the utter hopelessness of making any effectual stand for liberty, and a belief is fully avowed that the Government is surely and steadily running its course to an empire. So far as the United States Supreme Court is concerned, its decision is not looked forward to with any interest, as no one expects it to make an issue with Grant. The opinion is general that it will decide against granting the writ of prohibition and will thus turn over Louisiana to the carpet-bagger Durell and his associates. The decision is expect-
